

Productive Infrastructure Rehabilitation Project

OFID was the only foreign investor of the project. PIRP aimed to stimulate private sector development and commercial opportunity by tackling the infrastructure constraints that prevent rural communities from engaging in productive, profitable activity. Sub-projects were proposed by village councils, producers' associations or farmers' interest groups, and included irrigation systems, local roads and bridges, livestock water supply systems, fresh water supplies and the natural gas network. In total 24 communities benefited from networks, another 14 communities benefited from improved transportation access.
